

ABSTRACT

A reflector alignment system uses an alignment beam propagating through a projection system that includes a mirror group to measure the apparent relative positions of two reference marks fixed to a reference frame on opposite sides of the projection system. Any movement of mirrors in the projection system will be detected as a shift in the apparent position of the reference marks.